

Another Rainy Day

By Danny Schwarze

She wakes up every morning with a storm cloud hanging over her head
She greets it without thinking with an old, familiar dread And as she goes about her day the shadow never seems to fade
'til she falls back into bed and the end of another rainy day

It's the times when she slows down that the darkest shadows seem to form So she spends her days in moving trying to keep ahead of the storm But it's always one thing then the next and never a chance to catch her breath And her worn out coat and boots are drenched from another rainy day

And she thinks to herself
What's the use in fighting this way?
May as well ask a single stone to keep the ocean at bay And don't they say that all those showers in April lead to blooming flowers in May?
So throw out your umbrella and step outside and dance in the rain

Now she wakes up every morning
with a storm cloud hanging over her head
She greets it without thinking
like an old, familiar friend And though it never seems to fade she knows that at the end of the day she gets to crawl back into bed and get ready for another rainy day
Another rainy day
It's another rainy day